Teaching Reading

Many of the units contain longer stories or texts for reading. For every reading activity, there are some key points to remember:

- DO NOT translate the text. Students need to develop the skills to understand Lakota on its own, rather than using English as a crutch. They may be frustrated at first, but they will become fluent more quickly in Lakota if they don’t rely on English.

- Your students are successful readers if they can do all or many of the questions. They do NOT need to understand every word.

Some of the vocabulary and structures are “passive” at this point. In addition to helping students develop Lakota fluency by NOT translating everything for them you are also helping them to develop important analytical skills.

- Use positive feedback! There are some things in the reading that will remain ambiguous or not clear for your students. That is fine, as long as they can answer the questions. You will need to be very encouraging, supporting each little break-through, even if only of one word. Make sure to praise them for every good step and every correct answer.

It is important to help your students analyze the context or situation of reading activities, so that they can guess the meaning of new or unknown words more easily. Invite your students to explore the situation. Read the first set of directions and try to identify the type of text.

The content of some kinds of texts is easy to understand. Use this as a jumping off point for analyzing the rest of the text. Put the list of their ideas on the board. These are their hypotheses about what might be in the text. After you read the text, you can ask them to see how many of their ideas were right or partly right!

Teaching Vocabulary

Use flashcards to introduce new vocabulary, as you did with Levels 1 and 2. In the textbook there are illustrated pages that present new vocabulary, in addition to new vocabulary spread through each unit.

- There are always three kinds of vocabulary:
  1. review, from earlier books and chapters,
  2. new words meant to be active in the chapter you are teaching,
  3. passive vocabulary, that students need to begin to get used to seeing, but don’t use actively yet.

When you are preparing to teach new vocabulary, divide the list of new words into smaller sections. Work with only five or six new words in the beginning, until students seem comfortable with those. Then add 2 or 3 more, work with the students until they are comfortable with those. Then 2 or 3 more, and so on, until you have finished the entire set.

Plan to review individual words often. Students cannot learn vocabulary with only one or two repetitions. You will need to go over the new words (and the words from textbooks levels 1, 2 and 3) many, many times.

A good approach is to start/end your classes with a flashcard review activity, asking all students to give you the corresponding word out loud. You can then use this time to work on their pronunciation of individual words and sounds as needed. Choral repetition, intermixed with individual pronunciation, is a good way to get everyone involved, and is a non-threatening way to “warm up” at the beginning of a class.

ASK/ELICIT DIALOGUES

In the Teacher’s Guide, many activities contain a set of “Ask” and “Elicit” questions. In this case “Ask” is meant to be used as prompts to get the students thinking and responding in Lakota. “Elicit” means simply that this is the desired response.

You should not accept one-word responses, or incorrect responses! If a student answers incorrectly, indicate (through silent gestures or body language) that they should try again for the correct version. Give praise for every step in the right direction. Keep prompting and encouraging the students until they produce the correct, elicited answer.

The students need to get used to responding to you in Lakota. Do not let them respond in English!

MODELING

Information in textbooks can be cold and impersonal - it cannot provide everything necessary to teach a language. Teachers are the real keys, and good teaching involves setting an example yourself.

Demonstrating outside of the textbook is the most effective way to get your students to internalize the target language skills. This is called modeling. When modeling new vocabulary or a new structure, you supply the students with a living, breathing context; you make the material real and relevant. If students are expected to produce the language outside of the textbook, they must spend time learning and experiencing the language outside of the textbook.

Here’s an example of modeling. This is just one example - remember that modeling can take many forms. You have space to be creative with it.

Whole class. Closed books. Use colored chalk if possible. On the board, draw a picture of a small leaf. Next to it, say and write Čhaŋwápe kiŋ čík’ala. Then draw a picture of a big leaf, saying and writing next to it Čhaŋwápe kiŋ thánka. Below those, draw and write similar sentences showing the plural forms. Your board should look something like this:

Čhaŋwápe kiŋ lé čík’ala. Čhaŋwápe kiŋ lé thánka.

Čhaŋwápe kiŋ lená čík’ala. Čhaŋwápe kiŋ lená thánkíŋkiŋyaŋ.

Now, draw a tall tree and write under it Čháŋ kiŋ lé háŋske. Then draw several tall trees and leave the sentence under it unfinished: Čháŋ kiŋ lená ____.

Call on a student at random to come to the board and try to finish the sentence. If they are not correct, invite another student up to the board to correct it.

Ask the students what they need to change when they are describing more than one of an object.

CLASSROOM PHRASES

Speak in Lakota as often as possible during class times. Every time you speak English, it takes the students out of the target language, and will slow down their overall progress.

Get into the habit of using Lakota as much as possible. Use these common classroom phrases:

Wówapi kiŋ natȟákapí closed books
Wówapi kiŋ yuŋapi opened books
Núŋmuŋm škáŋ po/pe. work in pairs
Wócčhuŋ Activity
Throughout the Level 4 Teacher’s Guide you will see these boxes:

Waúŋspewičhakhiye tȟawóksape
“Teacher’s wisdom”

These boxes contain useful tips or information that will make your job easier and your time in the classroom more effective. These bits of advice are placed conveniently near relevant activities - try them out right away! Keep track of the ones that work for you and make them a regular part of your lessons.

CORRECTIONS

Corrections will be noted in the Teacher’s Guide to repair any inconsistencies or errors that occur in the student’s book. Please take these into consideration when giving your lesson.

PREPARING YOUR LESSON

Read the Teachers’ Guide section on the unit or activities you are about to teach. Make sure you understand the purpose and goal of each activity (for example teaching the contrast between waŋ and waŋži). Become familiar with the sequence of steps taken in introducing the grammar point or vocabulary to be introduced. The sequencing of activities is usually very important to successfully teaching new language material to the students.

PREPARING MATERIALS BEFORE CLASS

If you are not spending time preparing for your lessons, you should try it. Good preparation before class makes a huge difference in the success of a lesson!

It is important to read ahead through the pages you plan on using for your next lesson and see if any activities require preparation. Also read through the Teacher’s Guide for the same activities. Check if any of the activities are marked with a symbol or special instructions.

If you see the listening symbol you will need to find the correct cd and a cd player before class. Play the track once to make sure it is the correct recording. The first track is an introduction to the audio tracks.

Sometimes a lesson will require flashcards. If you do not have the flashcards that are appropriate for the activity, you will need to make your own. You can do this by drawing your own pictures or by finding images on the internet and printing them. There should only be one image on each page, and it’s best if the picture takes up the whole page.

Many activities require you to copy and cut out small cards. The pages you need to photocopy are in the Teacher’s Guide. You will need to make enough for all the students in your class, and a few extras, just in case. Some of these activities have the cards in the students’ textbook. In this case, make sure you have enough scissors for the class to cut out their cards.

Other activities will require you to prepare signs or large pictures to put around the room. You will need to make the signs and put them up before the students arrive.

Finally, real objects are the best examples. Whenever possible, use the actual thing instead of a picture; for example, use a real apple instead of a picture of an apple. When you plan your lesson in advance, you have time to find these objects at home or at school. Using real items makes your lesson more alive, and the students are more likely to remember it!
At the beginning of each student’s textbook there are a few pages of introduction. They are meant to motivate and encourage students - go through them during your first lesson with a new class. There is a short introduction for the students, but also one for parents and other supporters. Encourage your students to show their parents or guardians the introduction as well. Your students will need all the support and motivation they can get, so that they are successful in their language learning.

Before you look at page vii with the class, ask if the students can name some traditional Lakota values. Write them on the board as students name them. Talk with the students about how these values can be applied in daily life. Then, look at page vii and talk about how these values can be applied to language learning.

During the school year, you can return to this page and talk to the students about what they’re learning and how the values can keep them focused and motivated.

Finally, invite your students to fill out their own information on page viii. You can do this in class or assign it as homework. Make time in class for students to share their information in small groups, or present their own or a partner’s information to the class.

It is very important that the students feel responsible for the book and for their own language learning. Encourage them to use the book both inside and outside of class!
Finally, using the whole list, give commands at random and see if the students can mime the correct action. If the students are incorrect, kindly mime the correct reaction. Be careful not to switch to English!

“Teacher’s wisdom”

The first lesson is a great opportunity to establish habits for the rest of the year. Start off by welcoming the students to class in Lakota!

Keep the contextualized classroom language (such as instructions) in Lakota as much as possible. Students will understand you if you help them with gestures, miming, pointing, pictures and other hints. If you use classroom language consistently in Lakota students will learn a great deal of language from this.

Using Lakota as much as possible creates a special language environment in the classroom. Just be sure to always keep in mind the level of the students’ Lakota, so that they are exposed to the language, but not overwhelmed.

Pair work. First, choose a student and model giving a command. Then let the student give you a command.

Divide the class into pairs. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their work. Make sure they switch roles.

Whole class. Ask the students if they recognise any of the characters from the previous textbook. Identify any characters the class cannot recognise.

Optional: Ask the students if they can remember any information about the characters. Who is from Rosebud? Who has a dog? Don’t worry if the students cannot remember this information! Getting to know the characters is just for fun.
Whole class. Open books. Instruct the class: “Who do Bob and Lisa see coming out of the bus? Listen carefully and number the characters’ names as Bob and Lisa talk about them.” Play the recording once, then give students time to finish marking their answers.

TAPE 2

BOB: Tȟašína waŋláka he?
LISA: Háŋ, waŋbláke.
BOB: Mike waŋláka he?

Whole class. Closed books. Write the model sentences on the board:

Tȟašína ____ he?
Háŋ, _____.

Then, call on a student at random to answer the first question, according to what they learned from the recording. Let the student write their answer on the board.

If there are any mistakes, call on other students to come to the board and make the correction.

Individual work. Open books. While the students are writing in their answers, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When all of the students are finished, let them check their answers with a partner.

KEY
Tȟašína waŋláka he? Háŋ, waŋbláke.

Summer waŋláka he? Hiyá, waŋbláke šni.
Matȟó waŋláka he? Háŋ, waŋbláke.
Kimi waŋláka he? Hiyá, waŋbláke šni.
James waŋláka he? Háŋ, waŋbláke.

Open books. Modeling. Choose one student to model the activity with. Ask the student to secretly choose one of the groups of children. Then ask them questions until you figure out which group he or she chose.

Ask: Kimi waŋláka he?
Elicit: Hiyá, waŋbláke šni!

Pair work. Divide the students into pairs. While the students are working with their partners, walk around the room and listen to their conversations.

If a student is having problems with pronunciation, first indicate that there is a mistake and give them a chance to self-correct. If the students cannot self-correct, demonstrate the correct pronunciation of the single word and have the student repeat after you. Then, ask the student to start from the beginning, using the corrected pronunciation.

Material preparation: Gather twenty or more classroom or household items. Keep them hidden until it’s time for the activity.

Whole class. Divide the class into larger teams, so that there are at least three teams in the classroom. Place the items you collected onto your desk, or a table where all the students can see. When everything is on the table, announce that the 10 seconds are going to begin. Use a watch or count slowly to ten. Then, use a blanket to cover the items, or quickly put them all back into the box.

Then, the students should work with each other to write down a list of all the items they remember seeing. When they are finished, let each team take a turn asking you what you see (in the box or under the blanket). They get a point for every correct item they remember. The team with the most points wins!

Whole class. Open books. Play the recording once, then give students time to finish marking their answers.

Ask: (name of classmate) waŋláka he?
Elicit: Háŋ, waŋbláke. / Hiyá, waŋbláke šni.

Let the student ask you questions as well.

Pairwork. While the students are working with their partners, walk around the room and listen to their conversations.

Whole class. Open books. First, play the first two sentences of the recording only.

Writing. While the students are writing in their answers, walk around the room and monitor their progress. Make sure that students are writing the diacritic marks (’ and ”) and the letter “ŋ” clearly.

When all of the students are finished, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Whole class. Modeling. Choose one student and have them read one of their sentences to the class. On the board, say and write a report of what the student got for his or her birthday, for example: David Jimmy thápa waŋ k’ú. Have the student read another sentence, and again write the report on the board.

Pair work. Writing. Have each student exchange their sentences with a partner. When all the students are finished, call on pairs at random to report on their partner and read their sentences to the class.
Whole class. Open books. Write mak’ú on the board. Call on a student at random to come to the board and circle the part of the word that means “me.” If the student is incorrect, ask the class to help correct it.

Individual work. When students have finished circling their answers, let them check their answers with a partner.

Now, move onto question two. There are several possible correct sentences for each picture. When the class is finished, call on several students at random to share their answers with the class.

KEY

Answers are up to the students.

Reading. Tell the students to read through the text carefully now. When they have answered questions a) and b) they should check their answers with a partner.

Call on students at random to share their answers. Ask them to point out where in the text they found their answers.

KEY

PG 6 / 16

Individual work. Have the students draw their answers. When they are finished, ask the students to listen to you as you read the sentences to see if they are correct. Read the first sentence - Lisa wapȟóštaŋ kiŋ waštélake. - very happily and with a smile. Then, read the second sentence - Lisa čhuwignake kiŋ waȟtélašni. - less happy and without the big smile.

Ask the students to raise their hands if they answered both correctly. Give praise for these correct answers.

PG 6 / 17

Whole class. Open books. Pointing at the first picture, show that Bob is happy and smiling. Then, say and write on the board: Bob iyéčhiŋkyaŋke kiŋ waštélake.

Writing. Walk around the room and check their work while the students are writing. When the class is finished, call on several students at random to share their answers with the class.

PG 6 / 18

Material preparation: You will need small cards with pictures of items to represent gifts. These can be flash cards, pictures of objects, or even the real objects if they are small enough. You will need at least one for every student.

Whole class. Have all of the students stand in a big circle. Give each of the students a “gift.” Then, tell the students to give their objects to the student on their right.

After receiving a gift, the student should report what they got and whether or not they like it, like the model sentences in the textbook.

If the students need more practice, have them pass the gifts again to the right, and report whether or not they like the new gifts. Continue until students seem confident with these phrases.

Modeling. Tell the class about something that you got, for example: Susie thápa waŋ mak’ú. Thápa kiŋ lé waštéwalake. Then, choose a student and indicate that they should do the same. When the student finishes, write about the student on the board, for example: Jamie Carl wíčazo waŋ k’ú. Wíčazo kiŋ lé waȟtélašni.

Group work. Writing. Put the students into groups of three or four. Have the students take turns telling each other what they got and whether they liked it.

Then, have the students take out a piece of scrap paper and write a sentence about each classmate they heard from. Call on students at random to read one of their sentences aloud for the class.

Modeling. Draw a stick figure on the board. This will represent you.

Now draw something that happened to you yesterday, for example, your mother called. Write the sentence under it, like this:

!Stick figure with a smiley face

Iná mas’ámakipȟe.

Draw and label several other things that happened to you around the stick figure on the board. Then call on students at random to ask if they had the same experience.

Ask: Iná mas’ámakipȟe. Níš tók?

Elicit: Háŋ, míš eyá. Iná mas’ámakipȟe.

Do this for all of the examples you have put on the board.

Whole class. Choose one of the pictures and read the sentence out loud, miming the actions while you speak. Give the students time to react and find the correct numbered picture. Encourage the students to say the numbers in Lakota. If necessary, repeat one or two more times. Then, move on to the next sentence.

When all of the sentences have been used, begin again. But, this time when all of the students have found the correct picture (they can show this by putting their finger on the picture), they should also repeat the sentence after you and copy your miming.

Finally, for activity c), say the number of a picture in Lakota, and the students should say the correct sentence. Optional: call on students at random to say a sentence. Make sure all students get a chance.

Whole class. Open books. Divide the students into groups of three or four. While the students are playing charades, walk around the classroom and monitor their work. Listen to their pronunciation and help if students are having trouble figuring out a particular mime.

Individual work. Writing. Write the example a) on the board, and write the answer below it. Make sure the students notice the correct word order.

While the students are writing, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share one of their answers.

PG 10 / 28

Whole class. Open books. Listen to each vowel separately. For each vowel, play the recording once and encourage students to repeat after the recording.

For the rhythm activities, be flexible. You can follow the stress patterns suggested in the image, or make your own. These can also be done with clapping or drumming.

The pronunciation sentence should be first tried slowly before students try to say it at another speed. It is more important to say it correctly than quickly. Make sure each student has a chance to demonstrate their pronunciation.
Whole class. Closed books. In Lakota, tell the class you have a horse. Then say and mime all the activities you do with the horse. Use these verbs: kaúŋspe, čháŋwak’iŋ iyákaškA, šuŋk’ákaŋyaŋkA, čháŋwak’iŋ khí, kastó, wók’u.

Then, let the students open their books to page 12. Have the students say the verbs and mime the actions with you.

When the students seem confident with these new verbs, divide them into groups and spend a few minutes playing charades with these verbs. One student will act out the verb, and the others must say which action it is. While the students are doing this, walk around the room and spend a few seconds with each group.

Individual work. Writing. While the students are composing their sentences, walk around the room and check their work.

When the class is finished, they should share their answers with a partner. Call on students at random to also share their answers with the class. Or, do a survey to see which students know someone who does the activities. If they do, ask them who. Encourage students to respond in full sentences.

Optional follow-up: Closed books. Divide the class into small groups. On the board or on a piece of paper for each group, draw a simple image of a horse. How many new words can the students remember? This can also be used as a warm-up activity for the next time you have class.

Individual work. Students should make their answer. When the class is finished, point or use flashcards to show the correct names of the horses.

Optional follow-up: make a set of flashcards for these horses and challenge the students to a flashcard drill. Or, let the students pick two flashcards: one from a set of horse pictures, and another from a set of activity pictures. Can they form a sentence saying what they do with that color horse?
Whole class. Open books. Play the recording once, then give students time to finish marking their answers.

Individual work. Introduce the context of the story. Show the students where they can find the glossary in their textbooks, and give them time to find the underlined words.

Write all of the words on the board: zuyá yápi, šuŋgmánuŋ, thóka, ihúničátha. Call on students at random to come to the board and write a definition for the word.

Pairwork. Skimming and scanning. Ask the students to work with a partner. They should quickly look through the text and pictures, and think up a title for the story. Challenge them to choose a Lakota title.

When everyone is finished, give each pair a chance to share their titles with the class.

Whole class. Open books. Read the story aloud to the class – be very animated and use gestures wherever possible to show the action in the story. Do not use English or translate any of the texts.

Then, choose three or four students who will act out the text. Assign them roles as the young narrator, the friend and the enemy.

Call on a student at random to read the first text, and direct the ‘actors’ to show the story. Have the actors mime the action. Encourage them to have fun with it, too! Do this for every text.

At the end, don’t forget to applaud your actors and readers.

Modeling. Open books. Choose a student to model the dialogue with. Have the student secretly choose one of the barns to talk about. Then, ask the student questions about what is in their barn. For example:

Ask: Šuŋgsápa waŋží waŋláka he?
Elicit: Háŋ, šuŋgsápa waŋ waŋbláke.
Ask: Šuŋksímaza waŋží waŋláka he?
Elicit: Háŋ, šuŋksímaza waŋ waŋbláke.
Ask: Eháŋuŋ! Thózi kíŋ hé é he?
Elicit: Háŋ, thózi kíŋ hé é.

Then, divide the class into pairs. While the students are working with their partners, walk around the room and check on each pair.

Individual work. Before the students do the activities, give them time to carefully read the text one more time to themselves. While the students are reading, walk around the room and offer help for any students that are still having trouble understanding the text.

When the whole class seems finished reading, let them make their answers to this activity.
Make a column on the board for each of the subjects: tȟóka, šúŋka, šúŋkawakȟáŋ, kȟoláya waŋ. Call on students at random to come and write one of the things from the list in the correct column. Ask each student to point out the part of the story where they found their answer.

PG 16 / 36 WAYÁWAPI

Individual work. While the students are filling in the missing words, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the students are finished, let them check their answers with a partner. Call on students at random to read their completed sentences to the class.

PG 16 / 37 BLIHÉLWIČHAYA YO

Whole class. Write the sentence “Šúŋka waŋ phápȟá.” on the board. Ask the class where they need to insert the -ma to make the sentence about them. Call on a student to come write it on the board. Ask the students to compare the sentences in activity 36 to the text under activity 34. How are the verbs different?

PG 16 / 37

Writing. While the students are working, walk around the room and check their writing. Correct mistakes by giving the correct version directly in Lakota. Try not to use English.

Be sure to give praise (in Lakota) to students who are working well!

PG 17/WÓUDSPE 1 REVIEW

The review activities provide the students with additional reinforcement of the introduced vocabulary and structures. They also give the teacher feedback on the students’ progress. Check their answers to see what needs extra work.

Reading
Bob’s Hunting Adventure

Materials and Props
flashcards of camping gear, flashcards or pictures of common objects, flashcards of hunting items, ‘who called me” role play cards

PG 18 / 1 BLIHÉLWIČHAYA YO

Material preparation: flashcards with pictures of a tent, tent pegs, a knife, a blanket, fishing line, rope, bait, and a fishing net. The real objects would be even better!

Whole class. Closed books. Using flashcards with pictures (and no English), preteach the following words: thiyóblečha - tent, wihíŋpaspa - tent pegs, owíŋža - blankets, míla - knife, hoíčhuwa - fishing line, wíkȟaŋ - rope, watȟáŋ - bait, hoíyupsiče - fishing net.

Optional activity: when the class has learned these new words, divide the students into groups and play charades. Students can reference page 18 in their textbooks for the new words.

PG 18 / 1

Whole class. Open books. Play the recording once, then give students time to finish numbering the items

TRACK 13
JAMES: Háu Matȟó, ták tókȟanuŋ he?
MATȟÓ: Hokhúwa mníŋ kta čha miglúwiŋyeya.
JAMES: Táku kiŋ hená nítháwa he?

PG 18 / 2

Individual work. Warn the class that some people gave more than one item. Play the recording again, and then give students time to think and match their answers. If necessary, play the recording a third time.

When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answer.

Follow-up activity: Pair work. Say and write on the board: Matȟó húŋku kiŋ Matȟó owíŋža kiŋ k’ú. Have the students work with a partner and write their answers in full sentences. Help the students put their sentences together. When the class is finished, invite students to write their answers on the board.

KEY

2. thiyóblečha
3. wihíŋpaspa
4. owíŋža
5. míla
6. hoíčhuwa
7. wíkȟaŋ
8. watȟáŋ
9. hoípatȟe
10. hoíyupsiče
Whole class. Read the dialogue out loud for the class. Give the students time to answer question a), b) and c) by themselves.

When the students are finished, they should check their answers with a partner. Call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

If any students are having trouble with these questions, it is very important to help them now. Take the time to carefully explain the material to any struggling students. If they do not understand these concepts now, they will have great difficulties throughout the rest of the unit.

Individual work. While the students are writing their answers, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the class is finished, they should check their answer with a partner. Call on pairs at random to read out loud one of the four dialogues to the class.

KEY
nič’ú , mak’ú.

Individual work. Writing. While the students are composing their sentences, walk around the room and check their work.

When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

KEY

Bob Ḣúŋkášila kiŋ Bob hoičhuwa waŋ k’ú.

Whole class. Closed books. Say and write on the board: Bob atkúku kiŋ. Finally, ask the students who is receiving the object. Draw a square around Bob.

Individual work. Students should mark the giver, receiver and object in each sentence. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the class is finished, they should check their work with a partner. Call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Pair work. Do the first sentence on the board. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the class is finished, they should check their work with a partner. Call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Whole class. Open books. Play the recording once, and watch for the students snapping.

See transcript on pg 11.
Pairwork. Divide the class into pairs. Each pair should work together to make six drawings on a piece of scrap paper. When they’re finished, they should divide the paper and take three drawings each. Then, each student should give away his or her drawings to students other than their partner. Model the last step by choosing a student to demonstrate with.

Ask: Joey, táku nič’ú he?
Elicit: Haŋpóšpula waŋ mak’ú.

Whole class. Make a circle. Each student should give their card to the person on their right. Then, taking turns around the circle, they should ask the person on their left what they got. Give every student a chance to speak.

Material preparation: You’ll need flashcards with pictures of common objects, one for each student.

Modeling. Choose two students to demonstrate with. Give one student a flashcard, and indicate that they should give it to the other student. When the second student gets the card, ask them about it, for example:

Ask: Tuwá ... (wówapi) ... kiŋ lé nič’ú he?
Elicit: ( Peter ) ... (wówapi) ... kiŋ lé mak’ú.

Whole class. Open books. Play the recording once, then give students time to finish drawing the arrows.

---

Individual work. Writing. First, call on a student at random and ask him or her about the last activity:

Ask: James Kimi mas’ákipȟa he?
Elicit: Háŋ, James Kimi mas’ákipȟa.

Then, say and write on the board: James Kimi mas’ákipȟa. Students should use this model for their writing.

While the students are writing, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers.

Material preparation: you will need to copy and cut out the role play cards for this activity. Make sure there are more than enough for each student.
Modeling. Choose a student to demonstrate with. Give them a card and prompt them to answer, like this:

Ask: Tuwa mas’aničipȟa he?
Elicit: (Čhažé) mas’ámakipȟe.

Take a card yourself and indicate that the student should ask you, too.

Then, ask the student what time he or she was called.

Ask: Tóhaŋ (Čhažé) mas’aničipȟa he?
Elicit: (Čhažé) (time) mas’ámakipȟe.

Again, let the student ask you the same question and respond using your role play card.

Pairwork. Distribute the role play cards and tell the students to find a partner. Tell the students to write down the information their partner tells them.

While the partners are working together, walk around the room and check their work. When both partners have finished asking and answering the questions, call on students at random to report on their partner.

Ask: Tuwa (Čhažé) mas’ákičipȟa he?
Elicit: (Čhažé) mas’ámakipȟe.

Ask: Tóhaŋ (Čhažé) mas’ákičipȟa he?
Elicit: (Čhažé) (time) mas’ámakipȟe.

Individual work. Write the example on the board. Ask the class how they see k’ change after ni. Then, have the students draw lines to match the pairs of words. Then, ask the students to look at each pair of words and underline the change.

Then, ask the students to answer the four questions. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers. Ask them to point out which word pairs demonstrate each change.

Individual work. First, ask the students to underline the part of the words that mean “me.” Call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Material preparation: flashcards or large pictures of maswígmuŋke, mázawakȟáŋ, waŋhíŋkpe, mázasu, tȟáȟča oyé, igmútȟaŋka oyé and itázipa.

Play a vocabulary game or drill the students on the new vocabulary several times.

Individual work. When the class is finished filling in the missing words, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.
Group work. Have as many dictionaries as possible at hand for the students. Divide students into small groups or pairs, and give each group a dictionary. Students that don’t have access to a physical dictionary may use the one online at:

http://www.lakotadictionary.org/nldo.php

While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, call on students at random to say which picture the word belongs to.

KEY

Some words may work for multiple pictures. Here is a possible answer:

picture 1: ómna, othápȟA, gmúŋkA, kigléǧA, khuté, ó, šutȟÁ, wakhúl yÁ, waákhitA picture 2: khuwá, napȟÁ, kigléǧA, khuté, ó, šutȟÁ, wakhúl yÁ, waákhitA picture 3: gmúŋkA, kigléǧA, hokhúwA

Individual work. Writing. Say and write the example sentence on the board: Howákuwa čháŋna hoíčhuwa ilágwaye. Then, call on a student at random to underline the object. Call on another student to underline the verb.

While the students are writing, walk around the room and check their work. When the class is finished, call on students at random to write their sentence on the board and read some of their sentences to the class.

PG 23 / 17B

PG 23 / 17C

Skimming and scanning. While the students are skimming and writing the verbs on paper, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the class is finished, let the students check their answer with a partner. Then, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

PG 24 / 18A WAYÁWAPI

Skimming and scanning. While the students are skimming and writing the verbs on paper, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the class is finished, let the students check their answer with a partner. Then, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

PG 25 / 18Č WAYÁWAPI

Individual work. Give the students time to read through the text slowly. Optional: choose two students to dramatize the text and read aloud to the class. Do not move onto the questions until all the students have finished reading the story.

When the class is finished answering the questions, call on students at random to share their answers.

PG 26 / 20 ABLÉZA PO!

Whole class. Say and write the following verb pairs on the board:

waŋníaŋke | waŋníaŋkapi

waŋmáŋke | waŋmáŋkapi

Call on students at random to come to the board and circle the verb that shows more than one person doing the activity. Then, call on another student to underline the letters that show this.
Individual work. Students should number the order for story A, and then check their work with a partner. Call on a student at random to share their numbering with the class. Then choose several students to read the sentences out loud, in the correct order.

Number the first picture of story B as a class. Then let the students work individually. When the students are finished, call on several students to read the sentences out loud, in order.

Students should number story Č individually. Then, call on several students to read the story out loud, with the sentences in order.

Pair work. Divide the class into pairs. Give the pairs several minutes to practice performing their story. Then, call “closed books time” and encourage the students to rehearse their story without using the book. If students forget their part, give them a hint, or let them peek at the book.

While the students are preparing, walk around the class and spend a minute helping each pair.

When the students are prepared, give each pair a chance to perform their story. Treat this as a fun opportunity for the students - let the students applaud their classmates after each performance!

PG 28 / 24

Individual work. Note: these pictures are follow-ups for activity 21. First, for each picture, read the sentences out loud. Make gestures and act out the meaning of the sentences as best you can. Do not use English!

When the students have finished, call on students at random to share their answers.

PG 28 / 25

Individual work. Writing. While the students are working, walk around the room and check their work. If you spot a mistake, indicate to the student where it is and give them a chance to self correct.

When the students are finished, they should switch papers with a partner and check for mistakes.

Then, divide the class into groups of three. Ask the students to take turns reading their stories aloud to their groups. Remind the students that they can also read their stories to the parents or family at home!

Optional: Let students write their stories on the board and work on spelling.

PG 28 / 22

Group work. Let the students work in small groups. First, ask the students only to find the five words from the comic strips. When all the students are finished, call on a student at random to write the five words on the board.

Hand out a dictionary for each group. Then, let the students fill out the right hand column of the activity.

When the class is finished, call on a student to come to the board and write the dictionary form next to each verb. If there are any mistakes, ask another student to come to the board and correct them.

PG 29 / 26-28

Whole class. Open books. Listen to each vowel separately. For each vowel, play the recording once and encourage students to repeat after the recording. The pronunciation sentence should be first tried slowly before students try to say it at another speed. It is more important to say it correctly than quickly. Make sure each student has a chance to demonstrate their pronunciation.

PAIR WORK

PG 27 / 21

Individual work. Students should number the order for story A, and then check their work with a partner. Call on a student at random to share their numbering with the class. Then choose several students to read the sentences out loud, in the correct order.

Track 15

Aŋ áŋpa, háŋpa, waŋblí, čháŋ, sáŋ, káŋ, páŋ, háŋ, waŋží
Aŋpétu waŋ él waŋblí waŋ waŋbláke.

Wiŋyąŋ kiŋ hé siŋtéňla kiŋ hé yušˈinyšˈin.
Whole class. Divide the class into teams. Optional: let the students choose a name for their team, in Lakota.

Say each word only twice. Mark the teams’ points on the board. Give praise for both teams when the game is finished.

Individual work. Play the recording twice, giving students time in between to mark their answers.

When the students are ready, call on a student at random to share their answers. If necessary, play the recording a third time so students may listen closely for the words they got wrong.

The review activities provide the students with additional reinforcement of the introduced vocabulary and structures. They also give the teacher feedback on the students’ progress. Check their answers to see what needs extra work.
Whole class. Open a discussion with your class about vision quests. What do the students know about it? Do they know someone who has been on a vision quest? What do they know about Bear Butte? Be open minded about different experiences and opinions.

Encourage the students to follow up on their questions after school, by asking an elder or family member.

Individual work. Read the messages out loud to the class. Then, let the students read quietly by themselves and answer the questions.

While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their work. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers. Ask the students to point out where they found their answer in the text.
Individual work. While the students are filling in their answers, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers.

KEY
k’ú: he/she gave it to him/her
mak’ú: he/she gave it to me
mayák’ú: you gave it to me
nič’ú: he/she gave it to you
čhič’ú: I gave it to you.

Individual work. Writing. First, write the example sentences on the board: the positive example (Sam thunkášitku kíŋ owínža waŋ k’ú kte.) and a negative example (Sam thunkášitku kíŋ haŋpíkčeka waŋžíni k’ú kte šni.). Call on a student to come to the board and underline the differences in the two sentences, except for the noun.

Then, while the students are writing, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When students are finished, give students a chance to read one of their sentences out loud.

Closed books. Draw two stick figures on the board. Give one figure a speech bubble that says “Wígli-uŋ-káǧapi etán mayák’u kta he?” and the second a speech bubble that says “Háŋ, wígli-uŋ-káǧapi eyá čhič’ú kte.” So that neither stick figure is holding it, draw a small circle between them, to represent the flatbread.

Call on a student to come to the board and underline the verb in each sentence. Then, ask the student which figure is the giver and which is the receiver. Ask a student to come to the board and draw the flatbread in the giver’s hand.

Closed books. Using flashcards, review the camping item vocabulary.

Then, have the students open up their textbooks to the role play cards. Just talking with the students, hold up a flashcard and ask them which jobs use the tool shown.

Optional material preparation: create small images of the camping items, at least ten of each item. When the students get their role play cards, let them also take pictures of the items that they “have.” This way, the role play will seem even more real, and they will be able to give another student the object if asked.

Modeling. Choose one student to demonstrate with and give them a role play card. Take a role play card yourself. Looking at your role play card, ask the student if they have and will give you one of the items you need. The student should say yes or no.
Individual work. Play the recording again and give the students time to finish filling in the blanks.

When the class is finished, choose five students to perform the dialogue.

Group work. Divide the students into groups of four or five. Distribute the role play cards, or make sure that all the students in the group have different cards. Let the students take object cards (if they have been prepared).

While the students are working, walk around the room and spend some time with each group. If students are having a problem properly forming sentences or with pronunciation, demonstrate the correct version yourself. Correct and give praise in Lakota.

Whole class. Open books. Play the recording once, then give students time to finish marking their answers.

Whole class. Divide the class in half. Each half should stand in two staggered rows, like the diagram below:

Play the recording a second time. When students have finished writing down their answers, call on students at random to share their answers.

Modeling. Stand in one team’s line. Ask a student on the opposite team if they can see you.

Ask: David, waŋmáyalaka he?
Elicit: Háŋ, waŋčhíyaŋke.

Now, ask a student on your own team. They should

Elicit: Háŋ, waŋčhíyaŋke.

Invite a volunteer to write the answer to the bonus question on the board.

KEY

Whole class. Give each student an animal card. Let the students walk around until they’ve talked with three classmates.

While the students are working, walk around and monitor their progress. Take an animal card yourself so that you can do the activity with any students that might find themselves momentarily without a partner.

Material preparation: small cards with animal pictures on them.

Draw a simple bear and a mouse on the board. Then, indicate that you are acting as the bear, say and write Matȟó hemáčha. Omáyaluspiŋ kta he? Use gestures to show what oyúspA means. Say and write the mouse’s response, again using gestures to communicate meaning: Hiyá, itȟúŋkala hemáčha. Očhiyuspíŋ kte šni.

Individual work. When the students have finished, let them check their work with a partner. Then, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Play the recording a second time. When students have finished writing down their answers, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Follow-up: In the recording, Grandma is speaking for the animals. What two words do we need to add when we repeat what someone else says? Tell the students to circle these two words around each of the animals’ sentences, in their textbooks.

PG 37 / 15B

Whole class. Play the recording again. This time, pause it after every Iktomi line, and have the students say the animals’ response. Be enthusiastic and encourage the students to say the lines loud and clear!

When all the students have finished marking their answers, call on students at random to share with the class.

Group work. Divide the class into groups of three. Each group should choose one of the dialogues to memorise and perform.

While the groups are working, walk around and spend time with each group. Coach the students on pronunciation and intonation. Announce a “closed book” time so that the students practice the dialogues without peeking at the text.

When all the groups are prepared, give each group an opportunity to perform for their classmates.

Pair work. Tell the students to find a partner. While the students are writing, walk around the room and check on each pair.

When the class is finished, each pair should exchange papers with another pair and check for mistakes. Help the students correct each other.

Individual work. Each pair should have a chance to perform their dialogue for the class.

While the performances are happening, the students who are not performing should draw a picture for each performance they see.

When all the performances are finished, applaud the performers and ask the students to display their drawings on their desks. You can also display them on the wall. Give the students a few minutes to enjoy the “gallery” and walk around looking at the art work.

Whole class. Open books. Draw two stick figures on the board, and label them Sam and Dad. Then draw another figure further away, and label that figure Grandpa.

In Dad’s speech bubble, write the two example sentences on the board: Lol’íȟ’aŋpi ʊŋspéčhičhiyiŋ kte. Lol’íȟ’aŋpi ʊŋspéničhiyiŋ kte. Underline čhi and ni in the two sentences.

Ask the class which one of Dad’s sentences means that Dad himself will teach Sam how to cook. Invite a student to come to the board and circle it. Then, ask the students who will teach Sam in the second sentence - Dad or Grandpa?

Individual work. Play the recording once, then give students time to finish checking off their answers.
Material preparation: either prepare the role play cards before class, or give students time to cut them out of their textbooks.

Modeling. Take a role play card and choose two students to demonstrate with. Find out what you need to learn and ask the student if they can teach you.

Ask: Lol’íȟ’aŋpi uŋspémayakhiyiŋ kta he?

Elicit: Hiyá, lol’íȟ’aŋpi uŋspékhičhiyiŋ kte šni.

Encourage the student to also ask you. If that student cannot teach you what you need to learn, try the next student. Perform the dialogue with both helper students.

Whole class. Make sure each student has a role play card. If you want, take one too and participate in the activity with the students.

While the students are interacting, walk around the room and check on their conversations. Some students might have difficulty finding a person with the right role play card to teach them, but give them encouragement. The goal of this activity is to talk, not to totally fulfill the task.

Writing. While the students are working, walk around the classroom and monitor their work. When all the students are finished, call on students to read one of their sentences to the class.

Individual work. Write the first sentence on the board: Pȟežíȟota etáŋ olé ye. Erase ye and call on a student to come to the board and change the verb to third person plural. Draw attention to the added -pi.

When the students finish writing, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

KEY

1) Pȟežíȟota eyá olépi.
2) Čhaŋlí etáŋ yuhá wačhékiyapi.
3) Čhaŋlí kiŋ wańyaŋpi.
4) Pȟežíȟota kiŋ yušlášla mánipi.
5) Pȟežíȟota kiŋ pusyá otkéyapi.

Makhínapte waŋží makáu wo.
Íŋyaŋ etáŋ makáu wo.
Čháŋ etáŋ makáu wo.
Nzúŋspe waŋží makáu wo.
Čhaŋiwakse waŋží makáu wo.
Yuílepi etáŋ makáu wo.
Čhaŋókpaŋ etáŋ makáu wo.
Čhéga waŋží makáu wo.
Material preparation: picture flashcards of all the fire pit vocabulary - šóta, čheȟnáǧa, pȟéta, očhéthi, iŋyaŋ, čhán, nazúŋspe, čhaníwakse, yuílepi, čhanókpaŋ, makhínapte, čhéga, mní, pȟešníža.

Whole class. Closed books. Show the students only three flashcards at first. Show the picture and say the word in Lakota, then let the students repeat the word after you. When the students recognise all three flashcards, add three more. When the class has mastered those six, add three more. Continue like this until the students have learned all the cards.

Then, let the students open their books to page 41. When the students seem confident with these new words, divide them into groups and spend a few minutes playing charades. One student will act out the word, and the others must identify it. While the students are doing this, walk around the room and spend a few seconds with each group.

Individual work. Tell the students to think about all the steps for making a fire. Ask your students: what is the first step? “Thokéya očhéthi waŋží káǧa yo.” is already labeled as the first step, so what should come after that?

When the students have finished numbering the frames, let them check their work with a partner.

To check all the students’ work, act out the steps in the correct order. Ask all the students to stand up, and follow you as you mime the steps in the correct order.

Pair work. Make sure partners take turns giving commands. While the students are working, walk around the room and spend time monitoring each pair.

Individual work. Challenge the students to do the activity only from memory.

When the class is finished, students should check their work with a partner.

Individual work. Read the first question out loud to the class. Ask the students to look at activity 25 and say if the reminder should start with háŋ or hiyá. Then, write the reminder on the board.

While the students are writing, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, call on students at random to read one of their answers out loud.

Individual work. While the students are writing, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, call on students at random to say one of the things that Sam cannot do or have.

Then, divide the class in half. One half will read Sam’s first line, and the other half will read Grandpa’s. The students reading Grandpa’s lines should cross their arms when it’s something Sam cannot have or do, and open their arms when it is something he can have or do.

Then, switch roles for the second half of the dialogue. Each half of the class should get one chance to be Grandpa.

Individual work. Students may reference previous activities to figure out the order.

When the class is finished, they should check their work with a partner. Then, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.
Whole class. Open books. Listen to each vowel separately. Play the recording once and encourage students to repeat after the recording.

The pronunciation sentence should be first tried slowly before students try to say it at another speed. It is more important to say it correctly than quickly. Make sure each student has a chance to demonstrate their pronunciation.

Note: you might need to explain what a čičí is for students that are not familiar with the word.

If a student gives an incorrect answer, don’t tell the the answer right away. Call on another student to correct it.

Whole class. Write the model sentences on the board:
Wówapi kiŋ ičú wo/we.
Wówapi kiŋ ikíkču wo/we.

Then, call on a student at random to come to the board and circle the difference they see in the two commends. If there are any mistakes, call on other students to come to the board and make the correction.
Whole class. Closed books. Use the model sentences that you’ve already written on the board.

Ask the class which of these two commands tells you to take the book, and which command tells you to take your own book. Give them the hint to remember the recording with Bob and Lisa. Call on a student at random to answer the question.

Open books. Let the students answer the same questions for the two commands in the book. Call on a student at random to share their answers with the class.

Individual work. Give the commands slowly and clearly, pausing after each one.

Haŋpíkčeka kiŋ ikíkču wo/we.
Čhuwígnake kiŋ ikíkču wo/we.

“My own things”: Haŋpíkčeka, Čhuwígnake, Owíŋža, Ičálu, Šiná

“Communal things”: Wóyute, Mní, Čháŋčheǧa, Oákaŋke

Individual work. Read the two parts of the dialogue, changing your voice for each character. Then, give the students time to answer the questions.

When the class is finished, call on a student at random to share their answers with the class.

Individual work. While the students are reading, walk around the room and be available to help. Students may look in their glossaries for words that they do not know. When the students have finished, let them check their answer with a partner.

Call on pairs at random to share their answers with the class.

Optional follow-up: Divide the class into pairs, and have the students practice the dialogue. Encourage the students to learn the dialogue well enough to perform it without their books.

Whole class. Open books. Play the recording once, then give students time to finish marking their answers. Call on a student to share their answers.

Individual work. Play the recording again. Then, read the individual phrases out loud to the class. Give the students time to mark their answers.

When all the students are finished, let them check their answers with a partner. Call on students at random to share their individual answers.

Modeling. Choose a student to demonstrate with. Ask them about an object that they have with them today, like the example:

Ask: Wówapi kiŋ yaglúha he?

Elicit: Hiyá, wówapi kiŋ waglúha šni.

Then, let them ask you a question as well.

Pair work. While the students are talking, walk around the room and listen in on their conversations. Help students with pronunciation and intonation by demonstrating the correct form yourself. Use only Lakota whenever possible.

Individual work. Give the students time to mark their answers and then let them check their answers with a partner. Call on students at random to write their answers on the board.

Group work. Divide the class into groups of four or five. Clear the space between where the groups are sitting and the board so that the students have a clear path for running.

Have each team declare a runner, and give that student something to write on the board with. Write the verb on the board and say “go” for the students to start running to the board. Call “stop” only when one of the students has the totally correct form written on the board - including accents and clear penmanship.

Keep track of points. The team with the fastest and most correct answers wins.

Whole class. Open books. Listen to each sound separately. For each word, play the recording once and encourage students to repeat after the recording.

The pronunciation sentence should be first tried slowly before students try to say it at another speed. It is more important to say it correctly than quickly. Make sure each student has a chance to demonstrate their pronunciation.

Material preparation: poster of the male dancer.

Whole class. Closed books. On the board, write these new vocabulary words: haŋpíkčeka, napókaške, haŋtkáŋoyuze, iškáhu ḥláhlá, tňahú íchósy, iphiyake, uŋkčéla káğapi, pňešá, huŋská, ógle, čhegnáke, huňu wänápiŋ. Then, saying the words, point to the items of regalia on the poster.

Call on student at random to do the same. Say a regalia item, and the student should point it out on the poster. Repeat this until each student has had a chance.
Whole class. Play the recording and give the students time to mark their answers. Then, to check the answers, play the recording again. Pause after each word and have the students repeat the word.

Pair work. While the students are working with their partners, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, have the students switch roles.

Call on students at random to show their pictures, their partners’ pictures and read a few lines of their writing.

Individual work. Writing. Have the students finish their drawings first. When the students have finished move on to writing and wait until the end of the activity to present the drawings.

While the students are writing, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, divide the class into small groups to share their drawings and writing.

Remind the students that they can show this work to their family at home, especially to the family members who dance!

Finally, have the students match the words with the items on the picture. When the class is finished, let the students check their answers with a partner.

Pair work. Divide the students into pairs. Make sure that there are dictionaries available in the classroom. While the pairs are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the class is finished with activity a), call on partners at random to share their answers.

Call on a student at random to answer question b).

Optional follow-up: What other types of dancers are there? Do the students dance, or know anybody who does? What differences do the students see in the costumes of the two dancers?

Individual work. Writing. While the students are writing, walk around the room and monitor their progress. Make yourself available to help.

When the class is finished, the students should share their answers with a partner. Call on students at random to share one of their answers.

PG 66/12

Pair work. While the students are interviewing their partner, walk around the room and spend some time with each pair. Pay attention to their pronunciation - help them fix mistakes by setting an example of the correct version in Lakota.

When the pairs are finished, call on students at random to report on their partner.
Whole class. Modeling. Say and write the word awáštewalake on the board. Using flashcards or pictures of free time activities, say which ones you like. Be very expressive while doing this. For example: Smiling and giving a thumbs up, show the picture of basketball playing and say: Lowáŋ awáštewalake! Mention several more activities.

Choose a student to demonstrate with. Ask them what they like to do, like this:

Ask: Táku tókȟuŋ awášteyalaka he?

Elicit: (Tȟabškál) awáštewalake.

Let them also ask you the question. Do this with several different students.

Skimming and scanning. Introduce the context of the story. Give the students time to scan the story and figure out what hobbies the reporter asks about. Call on a student to give the answer in Lakota.

Then, give the students time to read the text carefully. While the students are writing their answers, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers.

Optional follow-up: Put students into groups of three and give them time to learn and act out the dialogue. While the groups are practicing, walk around the room and spend some time with each group. Encourage them to really act out the parts.

Encourage the students to really check the aspiration by holding their hands or a piece of paper in front of their mouths while they practice. Demonstrate this by doing it yourself for each of the different sounds.

The pronunciation sentences should be first tried slowly before students try to say it at another speed. It is more important to say it correctly than quickly. Make sure each student has a chance to demonstrate their pronunciation.

PG. 73 / 3 ĬŤOΚAHE
Closed books. Whole class. Review building name vocabulary using the flashcards. Start with just three flashcards. When the students recognize them without fail, add three more. When students can recognize all 6 flashcards, add three more new cards. Continue like this until you have gone through all the vocabulary. Include landscape vocabulary if it’s appropriate.
Whole class. Modeling. Find a large map of the town where the school is located. Or, using a small map as reference, draw a large simple map of the town on the board.

Go through the major buildings in the town and comment on them and say their names in Lakota. Start by pointing out the school, and then the other important buildings nearby. Also point out rivers and parks.

Individual work. While students are labelling the town, walk around the room and check their work.

When the class is finished, they should check their answers with a partner. Review all the correct answers as a class.

Elicit: Mike wówapi othí-ta yíŋ kte.

Let them also ask you the question. Do this with several different students.

Pair work. First, have the student draw the character’s paths on the map, without showing anyone. Then, let the students find a partner and begin asking questions.

Optional exercise: Have the students guess where their partner’s characters are going, rather than just asking. If you choose to do this exercise, demonstrate with a student, like this:

Ask: Mike wówapi othí-ta yíŋ kta šni.

Elicit: Hiyá, Mike wówapi othí-ta yíŋ kta šni.

Ask: Mike owóškate-ta yíŋ kta he?

Elicit: Háŋ, Mike owóškate-ta yíŋ kte!

While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

Material preparation: large signs with the names of buildings and tape or tack to stick them up with. Note: try to put the labels up while you’re walking around checking the students during the previous activity, or put up the labels before the lesson begins. If you have to put them up while the students are unoccupied, involve them in the process - ask for their input on where to hang the labels. Or, give each label to a student and have the student decide where to put it. The privilege of putting up a label can be used as a reward for good students.

Whole class. Modeling. Choose a student to demonstrate with. Ask them where one of their characters is going, like this:

Ask: Mike tókhiya yíŋ kta he?

Elicit: David, tókhiya níŋ kta šni.

Ask: Mike owóškate-ta yíŋ kte!

Then, let the student go to that place. Repeat this with several other students.
Whole class. Invite all the students to stand with you at the board. Then, one by one, ask them where they will go. If the student responds with a correctly formed sentence, let them go to that place. If they make any mistakes, help them find the correct statement. Continue until all the students have gone somewhere in the room.

Individual work. Writing. Say and write the sample sentence on the board. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers.

Whole class. Closed books. Write the example on the board:
Lisa Tȟašína kičhí wačhípi-ta yápi kte.
Call on a student at random to come to the board and circle the word that is added to show that the girls are going together. Also ask the students what other special markers tell us they recognise and what they mean.

Whole class. Open books. Play the recording once, then give students time to finish marking their answers.

PG 75 / 12 BLIHÉLWIČHAYA YO

Whole class. Closed books. Part A) Call on a student at random to come to the board and be your example. Choose the farthest labeled place in the room for the student. Say and write the first sentence on the board: (Student) (place)-ta yíŋ kte. Then, tell the student to walk very slowly and go to that place.

As the student is leaving the starting point, pause the student, then say and write on the board: (Student) (place)-ta iyáya.

Don’t let the student go any further. As if you’ve already forgotten, ask the class:

Ask: (Student) tókhi iyáya he?
   Elicit: (Student) (place)-ta iyáya!

Then let the student finish the trip to where they are going.

Part B) Write two sentences on the board:

1. Lisa wačhípi-ta yíŋ kte.
2. Lisa wačhípi-ta iyáya.

Introduce the situation: “Lisa’s Mom has been making lunch for Lisa and all of her friends! But when she calls them, she realizes that they have all left for somewhere already!”

Ask the students if they should use iyáya or yÁ for this situation. When the correct answer has been made, ask the class what they need to change to say that Bob is going too. Call on a student at random to come to the board and make the changes to the sentence.

PG 76 / 13 ABLÉZA PO!

Whole class. Open books. Read both of the dialogues out loud to the class, changing your voice for both parts. Then, ask the students to write in their answers. Call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

PG 76 / 14 BLIHÉLWIČHAYA YO

Material preparation: small cards with a different destination in town on each, enough for each student to have one.

Closed books. Modeling. Choose a student to help you demonstrate. Take one of the destination cards and invite the student to go with you. Encourage them to accept, like this:

Ask: Tȟab’ápȟapi-ta uŋyíŋ kte he?
   Elicit: Háŋ, uŋyíŋ kte.

Then report to the class where you two are going, saying and writing on the board: Tȟab’ápȟapi-ta uŋyáŋpi kte.

Now choose two students. Give one a new destination card and encourage them to invite the other student. When the second student accepts, indicate that they should report their plan to you.

PG 76 / 14

Pair work. Give one student in each pair a destination card. When the students have made their invitations and acceptances, they should come report to you. When the students report to you, give them a new card so that the other partner has a chance to invite.
Individual work. First, let the students make their guesses. Then, play the recording. How many times were the students correct?

Whole class. Modeling. Choose a student to demonstrate with. Let them choose one of the characters. Guess which character the student is by asking him or her where they are going, like this:

Ask: Owáyazaŋ othí-ta lá he?

Elicit: Háŋ, owáyazaŋ othí-ta blé!

Then, switch roles and let them also ask you the questions.

Pair work. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress. Make sure the students switch roles. They can start the game again and play another round if there is still time.

Individual work. Writing. Say and write the sample sentence on the board. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

Pair work. Let each student find a partner. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their conversations.

Modeling. Choose a student to demonstrate with. Let them choose one of the destinations. Ask him or her where they are going, like this:

Ask: Tókhiya lá he?

Elicit: (Place)-ta blé.

Say and write a note about the student on the board, like this: David (place)-ta yé. Then, have the student ask you. Make sure the students write down a note about your answer, too.

Pair work. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their notes.

Whole class. Modeling. Choose a student to demonstrate with. Have the student stand at the board, and choose a destination for him or her to walk to. When the student starts off, announce iyáye!, and then follow the student repeating yé until they arrive. When the student gets to the destination, announce í!

Choose another destination for the student. Comment as the student goes again, using iyáye, yé, and í at the appropriate times.

Individual work. Writing. Say and write the sample sentence on the board. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When all the students have finished, call on students at random to share their answers.
Whole class. Modeling. Choose a student to demonstrate with. Let them choose one of the characters. Ask them who ran at which time:

Ask: Tuwá 3:55 k’un héhaŋ í?
Elicit: Bob 3:55 k’un héhaŋ í!

Then, switch roles and let them also ask you the questions.

Pair work. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress. Make sure the students switch roles.

Individual work. Writing. First, give the students time to do the math and put the runners into order. Let the students check with a partner, and then call on students at random to write the characters in order on the board.

Then, give the students time to write their sentences. Say and write the sample sentence on the board. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

Call on a student at random to share their answers with the class.

Material preparation: Label places in your classroom with the names of places around town.

Whole class. Modeling. Say and write on the board the three basic direction commands: ópta yá yo, aóhomni(yaŋ) yá yo, óptakiya yo. Make a basic picture for each of them.

Choose a student to demonstrate with. Without telling them where they’re going, choose a place in the room and direct the student there. When the student thinks they know where they’re going they should say: ______-ta mníŋ kte.

Whole class. Closed books. Choose students at random and repeat this process with each of them. Make sure each student gets a turn.

Optional follow-up: After this, let students work in pairs and do the same activity. This would work best with a smaller class or in a larger space.

Pair work. Students should draw this on the map on pg 81, or on a separate photocopy of the map (not on the two little maps below). One partner can open their book to page 81 for the map, and the other can have their book open to page 82 for the instructions.

Let each student find a partner. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their conversations.

Pair work. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their conversations. Make sure the students switch roles.

Call on students at random to say “where they went” on the map.

The review activities provide the students with additional reinforcement of the introduced vocabulary and structures. They also give the teacher feedback on the students’ progress. Check their answers to see what needs extra work.

Individual work. When the students finish drawing their maps, they should show them to a partner.

Individual work. Writing. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When all the students have finished, call on students at random to share some of their sentences.

Whole class. Give the students a minute to answer the question in the book. Then, call on a student at random to write their answer on the board.

On the board under Uŋyín kte, draw and label two stick figures to represent Lisa and a friend. Then, write the other three sentences (Mníŋ kte, Uŋyáŋpi kte, and Yápi kte) on the board. Call on several students at random to come to the board and illustrate one of the sentences with stick figures.

Call on other students to make corrections until there are correct stick figure illustrations for each sentence. If the students are having trouble, give them hints to lead them towards the answer, without simply giving the answer yourself.

KEY

Material preparation: Large signs with city names, placed around the classroom.

Whole class. Modeling. Choose a student to demonstrate with. Invite them, and let them accept or decline.

Ask: Michael, Waŋblí Pahá-ta uŋyín kta he?
Elicit: Oháŋ, uŋyín kte.

Go with the student to that place in the room. After that, let the student invite you somewhere. Accept the offer, and go with the student to that place.

Repeat this sequence rejecting the invitation as well.
Pair work. All the students should start with their partners in the front of the room. Give the students time to make their invitations. Then, call on pairs at random to report where they’re going.

Ask: Tókhiya uŋyáŋpi kta he?
Elicit: Waŋblí Pahá-ta uŋyáŋpi kte.

When all the pairs have reported, let the students go to the places they chose. Tell the students to switch roles and have the other partner make an invitation. Remind the students that they may reject the first invitation if they want.

Again, call on pairs at random to report where they’re going. Then, let the students go to their new destinations. Repeat the activity several times until the students are comfortable with making and accepting the invitations.

Then, let students check their answers with a partner. While the students are checking, walk around and check their work yourself as well.

PG 85 / 6A WAYÁWAPI

Pair work. Ask the students to follow along in their books while you read, following the line of text with their fingers or a ruler. Read the dialogue out loud to the class, changing your voice between the two characters.

Let the students work on the task with a partner. When the class is finished, call on students at random to come write their answers on the board.

PG 85 / 6B WAYÁWAPI

Individual work. Tell the students to read the text carefully this time. While the students are reading and working, walk around the room and check on their progress.

When the students are finished, call on students at random to share their answers. Ask them to point out where in the text they found their answers.

Whole class. Closed books. Draw a column on the board. Then, say and write on the head of the column “personal affix.” In the column write -uŋ-, then call on students at random to come to the board and write other personal affixes that they know. If the students are having trouble getting started, let them look in their books for inspiration, or give them some hints.

Pair work. Open book. Have the students complete the activities together. While the class is working, walk around the room and check on each pair. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers.

PG 86 / 8

Group work. Divide the class into small groups so that each group has access to a dictionary.

While the class is working, walk around the room and check on each pair. When the class is finished, call on students at random to write their answers on the board.

Whole class. Open books. Call on students at random to share their guesses with the class. Then, reveal which answer is correct. Ask the students to point out which verbs have their affixes in different places. Then, ask the class which verb has its affixes in the same place.

Then, move onto activity b). Let the students work with their dictionary groups. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the class is finished, call on students at random to write some of their answers on the board.

Individual work. Writing. Say and write the example sentence on the board. Then, call on a student to choose another word from the list, and improvise another example sentence on the board.

While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their writing.

Group work. Divide the students into groups of three. Choose one group and help them demonstrate the dialogue.

While the students are working, walk around the room and spend some time with each group.

Then, give the students time to individually write down their reports on a piece of paper. Call on students at random to share their “plans” with the class.

Whole class. Closed books. If it is possible, take your class outside to see a real tree, or bring a small tree to the classroom. If neither of these options are possible, use a large image of a tree or draw it on the board.

Walk the students through all the parts of the tree. Don’t forget to mention the insides and underground parts of the tree.

Use several different kinds of trees for examples, including coniferous and deciduous trees.

Whole class. Closed books. Ask the class how they make an invitation. Give the example on the board Waúŋkšupi kte? Then, write several more verbs in dictionary form on the board. Call on pairs of students at random to come to the board and write the verb in an invitation.

Then call on students at random to verbally accept or decline the invitations written on the board.

Finally, ask the students to work with a partner. One partner should choose an invitation to make. The other should accept it. Then, they should come to the board and write down an announcement about where they’re going. Help the students form the correct form of the verb (1st person plural).

Pair work. Open books. Let the students work with a partner to answer the two questions. When the students are finished, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Individual work. Writing. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the students are finished, let them check their answers with a partner. Call on students at random to come to the board and write one of their answers.

Whole class. Closed books. Ask the students if they can give some reasons why trees are important. Call on students at random to write some of their reasons on the board.

Then, ask the class to name some reasons why trees are important to Lakota culture. Let them work in small groups and write down some reasons on a piece of paper. When the students are finished, call on each group to share their reasons.
Material preparation: large cards with tree parts on them.

Whole class. Closed books. Clear the center of the room and line up all the students at the board. Call out the parts of the tree in order, and direct the students holding those cards to stand or sit in the proper spot. This should slowly build a tree! You can try different types of trees (some with flowers, some very small). After this, see if the students can arrange themselves in a tree. Encourage them to use the Lakota words throughout the activity.

Individual work. Give the students time to look through both pages of the tree guide and circle the trees they recognise. When the students are finished, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Individual work. Let the students read through the text more carefully and circle their answers. When the students are finished, let the students check their answers with a partner. Call on students at random to share their answers with the class. Ask them to point out where in the tree guide they saw their answers.

---

KEY
Individual work. When the students are finished they should check their work with a partner.

Call on a student at random to share their answers. Ask them what parts of the sentences show them that they are plural.

Individual work. Let the student prepare their answers on a piece of scrap paper.

When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers. Make sure the students notice that not all words reduplicate in the same way.

Group work. Put the students into small groups so that each group has access to a dictionary. While the students are working together, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the class is finished, let each group write one or more of their answers on the board.

Pair work. Remind students that even though they are working with a partner, they need to write down their answers individually.

While the students are working, walk around the room and spend a little time with each pair. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Material preparation: blank scrap paper and drawing supplies. Also, ask students to bring their own if possible.

Individual work. Ask the students to write down notes from the recording about what the tree should look like. Play the recording once, pausing between each sentence. Give students a short time to start their drawings from their notes.

Then, play the recording a second time, again stopping between each sentence. Give students time to draw. Finally, play the recording all the way through without stopping. Let students finish their drawings and figure out which tree Bob described.

Let the students share their drawings in small groups. Call on a student at random to tell the class which tree Bob described.

Pair work. While the students are working with their partners, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When all the students are finished, call on pairs at random to share their answers with the class.
Pair work. The students will probably not know the uses for all of these trees. Let the students brainstorm with a partner, and mark as many answers as they can. Then, call on pairs at random to share their answers with the class. Correct their answer, if it is wrong, and write the correct answer on the board.

You can use this activity to begin a discussion about other uses of trees. Can the students see any wooden things in the room? Do the know what kind of wood it is?

Individual work. Writing. If possible, quickly review the vocabulary words using flashcards or a drill.

While the students are filling in their answers, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, call on students at random to come to the board and write their answers.

Whole class. Closed books. Modeling. Choose a student to demonstrate with. Draw five objects on the board, for example: a rock, a banana, a leaf and a flower. Indicate that you are thinking about one of the objects, for example the rock, and tell the student one description of the rock. The student should guess which of the five objects you’re thinking of, like this:

Ask: Táku kiŋ lé tkét。“

Elicit: Lé ínyaŋ héčha he?

If the student doesn’t guess on the first try, keep giving different descriptions until the student guesses correctly. Then, let the student choose a group, and give a description while you guess.

Pair work. Open books. Again, encourage students to think up other objects to describe.

While the pairs are working, walk around and spend a little time with each pair. Pay special attention to how they form the reduplications, and help them if they are having any problems.
Whole class. Closed books. With the class, brainstorm some ways that people use trees and products from trees. Write the ideas on the board.

Then, with the class, brainstorm some ways that trees are used in Lakota culture. What things can we make out of trees? Are there other ways we use trees? What are some important trees for the Lakota? Why are they important?

Encourage the students to be open-minded about different practices and regional differences. Be equal with all students and demonstrate acceptance and open-mindedness to your class.

Pair work. While the students are working with their partners, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When all the students are finished, call on pairs at random to share their answers with the class. It is possible that some of the uses are not obvious to the students, so give them hints to find the correct answers.

Pair work. Demonstrate the first two matches to the students, and write them on the board. While the students are working with their partners, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When all the students are finished, call on pairs at random to read their answers with the class.

Individual context. Skimming and scanning. Introduce the context of the story, and emphasize that Iktómi is really silly and always gets in trouble. Tell the students to quickly look through the text and find the thing that Iktómi wants to make.

Call on a student at random to share their answer. Ask him or her where in the text the answer is.

Individual work. Skimming and scanning. Tell the students to quickly look through the text again and write down each of the trees Iktómi tries to use. Call on a student at random to come write their answers on the board. Ask them to show where in the text they saw their answer.

Individual work. Tell the students to read the text now slowly. While the students are reading, walk around the room and offer help for any students that are still having trouble with pronunciation.

When the whole class seems finished reading, let them make their answers. Then, call on students at random to share their answers, and point out where they found it in the text.

Individual work. Writing. Look at a type of wood that Iktómi can’t use, for example kȟáŋta. Ask the students why this tree might not be good for making arrow shafts. Write the reasons on the board.

Then, say and write the model sentence on the board. Kȟáŋta čhaŋsákala kiŋ líla chás pȟaŋšpȟáŋžela čhaŋkhé tókȟa ilágwaye šni. Underline the two variables kȟáŋta and pȟaŋšpȟáŋžela. Tell the students to use this sentence as a model for their writing.

While the students are writing, walk around the room and monitor their work. When the class is finished, call on students at random to write some of their sentences on the board. Invite them to share the sentence that they think is most likely wrong. If the sentence is incorrect, call on other students to come to the board and help correct it.

It is more important to say it correctly than quickly. Make sure each student has a chance to demonstrate their pronunciation.

Material preparation: activity cards with problems and physical objects (a chair, blankets, water, fake medicine, a comb, soap, and bread or fake food).

Have the class stand in a big circle, with the objects in the middle. Choose one student to stand in the middle, or start in the middle yourself. Give each student a problem card.

Choose a student to stand and read off their problem. The person in the middle should give advice on what to do. The student with the problem should come to the middle and get the object that will help them, while the person in the middle goes to the circle. The student who had the problem will now give advice.

Call on another student to say their problem to the person in the middle. Repeat this process until all the students have had a turn.

Group work. Closed books. Divide the students into groups of four. One student may have an open book, and choose one of the problems to mime. One or all of the students in the group should give some advice.

While the groups are working, walk around the room and spend some time with each group. Feel free to participate!
Group work. Closed books. Divide the students into groups of four. Choose one group to have the problem, while the other groups give advice. Say the problem, and the students in the group should mime it. The other groups should work together to come up with some advice. Say and write the first example on the board.

Ask: Ípuzapi.
Elicit: Mníkáȟpóapi waŋžígži wičhák’u po’pe.

Repeat this so that each group has a turn being the group with a problem.

Individual work. Point out to the students the special verb that the buffalo uses when talking about his own body parts. Ask the students if it is the same as how the buffalo might say that he has a house or a car. Then, ask the students to answer the four questions.

When the class is finished, let the students check their answers with a partner. Then, call on students at random to share their answers.

Individual work. Ask the students to read the text slowly and carefully to themselves. While the students are writing in their answers, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the students are finished, call on students at random to read the text out loud with you.

Individual work. Choose one student to read the text out loud with you. Then, ask the students to read the text slowly and carefully to themselves. While the students are writing in their answers, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the students are finished, call on a student to come and write the answer to the first question on the board. Ask them to point out where they see it in the text. Then, let the students move on to the second question. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers.

Whole class. Closed books. Using pictures or drawings on the board, review these vocabulary items for body parts: siŋté, siŋtúpi, wiyaka, hiŋ, hopášku, phuthíŋhiŋ, hiŋ, phuté, phású, hoápe, hú, hé, thukíha, napé, šaké, šaké, čheží, ištá, apé, ȟupáhu, nakpá, iyóha.

When you say the word, also mime the body part. Show a picture as well. Have the students repeat after you and mime the body part as well.

When the students have learned the words, say the word, and the students should correctly mime the body part. Then, switch and mime the body part, while the students call out the correct word.

If the students need more practice, write all the words on the board, and let them play the miming guessing game in small groups. You can use this as a review warm-up at the beginning of your next class meeting!
Make sure the students recognise these animals: heȟáka, uŋkčékhiŋa, pȟatkáša, hoǧáŋ.

Individual work. Let the students prepare their answers in their textbooks. Meanwhile, on the board make a column for each of the four animals. When all the students are finished, call on students at random to write a word in the correct column on the board.

Material preparation: small cards with pictures of animals (that the students know in Lakota)

Whole class. All the students should stand in a big circle. Give one animal card to each student, and tell the students to keep their animal secret. Choose one student and ask them a question about their card. Then, invite a different student to ask another question. Let the students question their classmate until they figure out which animal their classmate has, like this:

Ask: Háŋ, hi mayúkȟe.
Elicit: Hí niyúkȟaŋ he?
Ask: Wíyaka niyúkȟaŋ he?
Elicit: Hí niyúkȟaŋ he?
Ask: Wíyaka niyúkȟaŋ he?
Elicit: Hí niyúkȟaŋ he?
Elicit: Hí niyúkȟaŋ he?

When the animal is guessed, choose a new student and let the class question them. Do this until every student has had a chance to be questioned.

Closed books. Modeling. Choose an animal and write six descriptive sentences about them. Ask the students to help you and make suggestions. Say and write the sentences on the board.

Open books. Individual work. Writing. While the students are working, walk around the room and spend a minute with each student correcting their work or helping them think up another sentence.

When the class is finished, call on students at random to come to the board and write their worst sentence. With the class, help the student correct their sentence. Be sure not to reveal which animal the sentence is about!
Individual work. Erase everything on the board and tell students to put away their lists if they made any during the last activity. Tell the students to put a check next to the things the animal has, and put a question mark next to the ones that Iktómi doesn’t ask about. Play the recordings straight through.

When the students are finished, they should check their answers with a partner.

Individual work. Before this exercise, quickly review types of body parts: short, long, round, etc.

Tell the students to circle the correct description of each body part. Play the recordings straight through.

When the students are finished, they should check their answers with a partner. Then, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Individual work. Now, the students should circle the things that the animals don’t have. They should put a question mark next to the body parts that Iktómi doesn’t ask about. Play the recordings straight through.

Call on students at random to share their answers with the class.
The review activities provide the students with additional reinforcement of the introduced vocabulary and structures. They also give the teacher feedback on the students’ progress. Check their answers to see what needs extra work.

Whole class. Open books. Listen to each vowel separately. For each sound, play the recording once and encourage students to repeat after the recording.

Pair work. Start with only the first exercise. When the class is finished, call on students at random to come write the verbs they found on the board.

Then ask the students to try the second exercise. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers.

Material preparation: role play cards with weekend activities.

Whole class. Closed books. Give a role play card to each student, and take one yourself. Choose a student at random to demonstrate with. Invite the student to do the activity on your card, and have them respond, like this:

Ask: Wakhúl uŋyíŋ kte.

Elicit: Oháŋ, wakhúl uŋyíŋ kte.

If that student rejects your offer, ask another student. Then, send that student off to invite another student to do the activity on his or her card. Finally, let all the students try the activity.

Pair work. While the students are writing reports on their “weekend plans,” walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the students are finished writing, call on students at random to share their plans.

Skimming and scanning. Remind the students that they shouldn’t read the text closely, just skim it quickly. When the students have finished answering the first question, call on a student at random to share their answer with the class.

Individual work. Tell the students to read the text carefully this time. While the class is reading and marking their answers, walk around the room and monitor their work.

Whole class. Closed books. With the students, brain-storm different things that animals do during the day. Let students come and write these activities on the board (in Lakota). Try to guide the students to all the activities mentioned in the text.

Individual work. Open books. Give the students time to read the text carefully and mark their answers. When the students are finished, they should check their answers with a partner.

When the class is finished, the students should check their answers by correctly miming the activity mentioned while you read the text. Read the text out loud, and stop after every sentence to see the students’ miming. Do the correct mime yourself. Then, move onto the next sentence. Continue like this through the whole text.

Individual work. Give the students time to make their answers. Then, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

After, ask the students what they remember about the daily habits of porcupines. How can we write a statement about them? On the board, compose two or three sentences using input from the students.

Individual work. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress. When the class is finished, let the students share their sentences with a partner. Then, invite students at random to come write one of their sentences on the board - the one that they are least sure about.

If there are any mistakes in the sentence, let other students help correct it.

Whole class. Read the questions out loud, and give the students time to think about their answers. Write the two sentences on the board. Then, call on a student at random to come and write waŋžíla and iyúha next to the correct sentences on the board.

Individual work. Introduce the story. Have the students complete only the first column. When the students are finished, they should check their answers with a partner.

Then let the students move onto the next column. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.

Pair work. While the students are writing, walk around the room and check their work. When the class is finished, call on a student to come to the board and write one of their answers. If there are any mistakes, ask another student to come to the board and correct them.

Optional follow-up: With their partner, give the students time to learn the dialogue. Give the pairs several minutes to practice performing their story. Then, call “closed books time” and encourage the students to rehearse their story without using the book. If students forget their part, give them a hint, or let them peek at the book.

While the students are preparing, walk around the class and spend a minute helping each pair.

When the students are prepared, give each pair a chance to perform their story. Treat this as a fun opportunity for the students - let the students applaud their classmates after each performance!

Individual work. When the class is finished filling in the missing words, call on students at random to come write their answers on the board.

Whole class. Closed books. On the board, draw two stick figures and objects at three distances, like this:

Show that the perspective is from the left stick figure by marking it with an arrow or something. For each of the three objects, label them with lé, hé or ká.

Then, add one more to each of the objects so that your board looks like this:

Call on students at random to come to the board and correctly label lenáos, henáos and kanáos.

Finally, add a bunch more to each group of objects and call on students at random to come to the board and label lená, hená and kaná.

Pair work. Divide the class into pairs. Quickly review all the food items possible. Then, choose a student to demonstrate with. You suggest a food to eat, and the student should guess which animal you both are like this:

Say: Pȟeží uŋyútiŋ kte.
Elicit: Eháŋuŋ, šúŋkawakȟáŋ heúŋčha.

Then switch roles with the student and let them make a suggestion.

While the students are working, walk around the room and spend some time with each pair.

Individual work. Students should number the sentences in order, and then check their work with a partner. Call on a student at random to share their numbering with the class.

Then choose several students to read the sentences out loud, in the correct order. As the sentences are read, lead all the students to mime the sentence.
Whole class. Play the recording once, pausing between each sentence. Give the students time to make their marks.

If needed, play the recording again all the way through without stopping. When the students are finished writing their answers, call on students at random to answer the questions.

Individual work. Writing. Play the recording a third time, and give the students time to write their answers. While the students are writing, walk around the room and monitor their progress. Check for any spelling and penmanship errors in their writing.

When the class is finished, call on students at random to come write an answer on the board.

Material preparation: Copy and hand out a “Lisa’s puppy” handout (in the appendix).

Individual work. Hand out the worksheet about Lisa and her puppy. Go through the questions one by one, stopping to check on the answers between each question. This should be review material.

Individual work. Give the students time to read the first paragraph only and then fill in the blanks. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

When the students are finished, call on students at random to read a sentence each in the first paragraph. Read through the whole paragraph with correct answers before moving onto the next paragraph.

Repeat this process for the second paragraph.

Individual work. When the students have finished and chosen their answers, call on students at random to share their answers with the class.
Individual work. Writing. Write the sample sentences on the board, and brainstorm one or two more with the students. While the students are writing, walk around the room and spend time with each student to check their work.

When the class is finished, call on students at random to come write one of their sentences on the board. Encourage them to write the sentence that they are least sure of. Then, correct the sentences as a class.

Material preparation: role play cards showing things done for the puppies.

Modeling. Closed books. Take a card for yourself and give one to a student. Ask the student what they have done, and they should respond with the activities on the card. Then, let the student ask you about what you have done.

Whole class. Each student should find a partner and ask them about what he or she has done for the puppies. When each pair is finished with their conversation, each student should find a new partner and ask again. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their conversations. Let the students switch partners about three or four times.

The review activities provide the students with additional reinforcement of the introduced vocabulary and structures. They also give the teacher feedback on the students’ progress. Check their answers to see what needs extra work.
Now, choose another student at random to be the next Iktomi. All the student should close their eyes. Let the student playing Iktomi choose a card to take. When the student is finished, call for the class to open their eyes and report if Iktomi has taken anything.

Repeat this until all the students have had a chance to play Iktomi.

Material preparation: cards with physical objects on them.

Closed books. Quickly review the word makíyušiče. Say it and write it on the board. Can the students remember its dictionary form? What does it mean?

Modeling. Take a card and show it to the class. Gesture that the object was broken and look sad. Then say: Mitȟáŋkala (object) waŋ makíyušiče. Take another card and ask yourself: Táku tókȟa he? And then answer yourself: Mitȟáŋkala (object) waŋ makíyušiče. Say and write these two phrases on the board.

Choose a student at random to demonstrate with. Give the student a card. Lead them through the question and answer using the phrases from the board, like this:

Ask: Táku tókȟa he?
Elicit: Mitȟáŋkala (object) waŋ makíyušiče.

Then, repeat this with another student.

Pair work. Distribute a card to each student. Let the students walk around the room and ask several of their classmates. While the pairs are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

Individual work. Writing. While the students are writing down their sentences, walk around the room and monitor their progress. If a student cannot remember the information from the exercise, help them make up some sentences.

When the class is finished, call on students at random to come write a sentence on the board. Call on other students to make corrections, if there are any mistakes.
Pair work. Writing. Introduce Iron Hawk to the students. Demonstrate the first sentence (for the bear) by saying and writing the correct sentence on the board.

While the students are working, walk around the room and spend some time checking the work of each pair. When the class is finished, call on students at random to read a sentence out loud.

Note: There is an error in the text book - huhú should be šúŋka. Please warn your students about this error.

Whole class. Open books. Play the recording once. Let the students mark their answers. When the class is finished, call on students at random to share their answers.

Play the recording again. Then, have the students write their sentences on a piece of scrap paper using the model sentences. While the students are working, walk around the room and monitor their progress.

Then, call on students at random to write some of their answers on the board.

Individual work. When the students have finished making their answers, let them check their work with a partner. Then, call on students at random to share their answers.

When the class has finished with the activity, ask each student to rate how much sense this makes to them, from 1-10. If some students are having trouble with this concept, spend some extra time with them explaining through examples. Go back through the activities that the class has already done and point out how this construction works.

Skimming and scanning. Remind the students that they shouldn’t read the text closely, just skim it quickly.

When the students have finished reading and writing out their answers, call on students at random to share their answers. Ask them to point out where in the text they found their answers.
Whole class. Say and write the example sentences on the board:

1. Uŋzóǧe kiŋ lená eháš tháŋka.
2. Uŋzóǧe kiŋ lená eháš čík’ala.
3. Uŋzóǧe kiŋ lená eyáš wahéhaŋyaŋ.

As you read them, mime the size of the pants. Then, have the students say and mime the sentences with you. Call on a student at random to answer the question. If they are incorrect, call on another student.

Individual work. When the students have their answers, call on students at random to come to the board and write one of the matching pairs of expressions.

Individual work. Ask the students to cover the rest of the text with a piece of paper. Give the students time to read through the first paragraph slowly. Do not move onto the questions until all the students have finished reading the story.

While the class is reading and writing, walk around the room and quickly check the work of each student. When the class is finished writing their answers, call on students at random to share their answers. Ask the students to point out exactly where in the text they found their answers.

1 While Bob was hunting with his father, Lisa was taking a walk in the woods. While she was walking, she found a lost animal!

   Skim through the text and find out what kind of animal she found. Write it here ____________
   What did she name it? Write the name here ____________.
   What is the verb for “she named”? Write it here _________________

2 Now, stand up and read out loud with the whole class.

   For everything Lisa does, act it out yourself.

3 Using Lisa’s story, answer the following questions by writing your answer in a full sentence.

   1) Tákuwe šuŋȟpála kiŋ wók’u he?

   2) Tákuwe Lisa suŋȟpála kiŋ hé yužáža he?

4 a) Imagine you have a new puppy, what would you do with it?
   Check the boxes of the things you would do.

   ○ Kičí mištíŋmiŋ kte.  ○ Wówak’u kte.
   ○ Kičí tȟiábwaškatiniŋ kte.  ○ Wátiŋ kte.
   ○ Hí wéčipážaža kte.  ○ Awáphiŋ kte.

   b) Now tell your partner what you plan to do with the puppy. Also listen to your partner. Do you have the same plan?
